

Proposition 37
Select Standards for Theological Inquiry

- I A Bon Ami waffle above the West Bend timer:

- II Should the concept of the Hiawatha Triad cast as an adventure story with very thinly cloaked social arguments be published in that form, both levels must have a certain degree of credibility. Content relating to the United States cannot ignore the recent derating of its competitiveness index by the World Economic Forum.¹ On a more positive note, a fresh theological approach has the potential to ease the tension between the Christian and Muslim spheres. This effort should become a little more credible if theological and religious inquiry is written to a standard. Current intent is to use Messers Klemm and Klink's view on theological models, Richard McKirahan Jr.'s book on Aristotle's theory of demonstrative sciences, and Timothy Crane and Rheta Rubenstein's "Traveling Toward Proof" as guidelines.²⁻⁴

- III A very faint cloud validated potential.

- IV - White dice with black spots: A wedge partially embedded in an unidentified substance: A manual flour sifter.
